

10 Bloodiest Battles of the Civil War

1. Gettysburg, Pennsylvania (July 1-3, 1863) – 51,112 casualties

23,055 Union casualties

28,063 Confederate casualties

2. Chickamauga, Georgia (September 19-20, 1863) – 34,624 casualties

16,170 Union casualties

18,454 Confederate casualties

3. Chancellorsville, Virginia (May 1-4, 1863) – 30,099 casualties

17,278 Union casualties

12,821 Confederate casualties

4. Spotsylvania, Virginia (May 8-19, 1864) – 27,399 casualties

18,399 Union casualties

9,000 Confederate casualties

5. Antietam, Maryland (September 17, 1862) – 26,134 casualties

12,410 Union casualties

13,724 Confederate casualties

6. The Wilderness, Virginia (May 5-7, 1864) – 25,416 casualties

17,666 Union casualties

7,750 Confederate casualties

7. Second Bull Run (Second Manassas), Virginia (August 29-30, 1862) – 25,251 casualties

16,054 Union casualties

9,197 Confederate casualties

8. Stones Rivers (Murfreesboro), Tennessee (December 31, 1862) – 24,645 casualties

12,906 Union casualties

11,739 Confederate casualties

9. Shiloh, Tennessee (April 6-7, 1862) – 23,741 casualties

13,047 Union casualties

10,694 Confederate casualties

10. Fort Donelson, Tennessee (February 13-16, 1862) – 19,455 casualties

2,832 Union casualties

16,623 Confederate casualties

 = 1,000 Union casualties

 = 1,000 Confederate casualties

Note: Casualty figures include soldiers who were killed, wounded, and captured or missing. Typically, the middle group was largest—at Gettysburg, for example, the Union Army had 3,155 men killed, 14,531 wounded, and 5,369 captured or missing. Many errors were introduced into the accounting process for various reasons, and Confederate records are particularly spotty. As such, these numbers (based on the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion) are best regarded as approximations, and different sources will often give slightly different numbers.