

Notable Civil War Nicknames

Person	Nickname(s)	Explanation
 Abraham Lincoln	The Ancient One The Tycoon Honest Abe	Used by friends to suggest Lincoln had great wisdom Flattering description of Lincoln's management style Alludes to Lincoln's honest reputation, in his time and ours
 Jefferson Davis	Gamecock of the South One-Eye Davis	A reference to Davis' fashion sense, as well as his tendency to respond aggressively to provocations A snide allusion to Davis' chronic eye infections
 Ulysses S. Grant	Uncle Sam/Sam Unconditional Surrender Butcher	Given to him at West Point because of his initials After Grant's early, smashing victory at Fort Donelson Used by enemies to suggest incompetent generalship
 Robert E. Lee	The King of Spades The Marble Man Uncle/Marse Robert	Early in his career, Lee ordered many fortifications dug Meant to suggest Lee's coolness under pressure Affectionately used by Lee's soldiers to show respect
 William T. Sherman	Uncle Billy Cump	Used by the troops under Sherman's command as a sign of affection, particularly later in the war From his middle name, Tecumseh
 Thomas J. Jackson	Stonewall	At First Bull Run, Jackson seemed indifferent as bullets whizzed past, leading a fellow officer to remark, "Look at Jackson, standing there like a stone wall."
 George B. McClellan	The Young Napoleon Little Mac	A reference to McClellan's seemingly unlimited potential and soldierly bearing, as well as his great ego Used affectionately by the troops under his command
 James Longstreet	Old Pete	From his father, who felt his son had great strength of character, and so gave young James the nickname Peter, which is derived from the Latin word for 'rock'
 Henry W. Halleck	Old Brains	Used admiringly by friends and sarcastically by enemies; in both cases a reference to his extensive body of scholarship on military theory and strategy
 John S. Mosby	The Gray Ghost	Referred to the Confederate cavalry commander's seeming ability to appear and disappear whenever and wherever he wished
 Mary Ann Bickerdyke	Mother	A tribute to Bickerdyke's great skill as both a nurse and a hospital administrator; she received cheers whenever she approached a group of soldiers
 Rose O'Neal Greenhow	Wild Rose	A reference to Greenhow's quick wit and sharp tongue, as well as her daring while serving the Confederacy as a spy